Columbia, MD – May 6, 2010 – Williamsburg Homes has once again set a new standard in Maryland home building. For the 26th year in a row, the highly regarded company has received a First Place MAX Award of Excellence from the Home Builders Association of Maryland in every category they entered. The award recognizes homebuilders in the state who provide buyers with excellence in design, livability and value in town homes and single-family homes. This 26-year achievement by Williamsburg Homes is unmatched among Maryland builders.

Bruce Harvey, president of Williamsburg Homes is very proud of this incredible achievement. “A great deal of the credit goes to our homeowners who enhance our designs,” said Harvey. “I believe that one of Williamsburg’s greatest assets is our people. Our organization is always attempting to improve on last year’s success, so this honor is shared by all of us,” continued Harvey.

“This is an amazing way for our team to cap what was an incredible year for us,” said Tim Morris, vice president of Sales and Marketing for Williamsburg. “We had record sales in 2009 – our best year in our 25 year history and now we take home seven awards, winning in every category we competed in. Our sales professionals are great listeners, our production managers do an extraordinary job of implementing custom changes requested by our buyers and the whole staff takes enormous pride in the work we do,” continued Morris.

Williamsburg Homes received a total of seven Awards of Excellence. For single family detached homes, they won for their “Wellington” and “Canterbury” models at Sheppard Manor in Ellicott City; the “Calvert II” model at Emerson in Laurel; and the “Thomas Goodwin” and “William Deaven” models at Fairwood in Bowie.
